Founders of fraudulent university in jail, HK associate still selling courses

St Regis ‘dean’ in business

As this is pure online learning... we do not need to register with the Education Bureau

Just a fool’s paradise

Scammers ‘on the rise’

Education

For a level of education set in the melting pot of Asian cultures, one would expect computers, traditional learning methodologies and a high level of accreditation. What we get is a virtual reality of non-authentic online learning that is often more expensive than the real thing. This has led to the rise of online scammers who capitalize on the lack of traditional education. These scammers often use false identities, false degrees and make false promises to lure unsuspecting victims.

One such example is the case of Mr Ho Kwok-cheong. Ho was a self-proclaimed “educational professional” who claimed to be the “dean of studies” of West Coast University in Panama City. However, an investigation revealed that he had never studied at this university and had no record of employment with them. West Coast University was an online university that offered courses in various fields, including business, engineering, and law. Despite being registered as a university in Panama, the courses offered were not accredited and the university did not have any physical presence.

Another example is the case of York University in Florida. The university was registered in Florida and advertised courses in various fields, including business, engineering, and law. However, an investigation revealed that the university did not have any physical presence and the courses offered were not accredited. The university was a degree mill that used false degrees to lure unsuspecting victims.

These cases highlight the importance of accreditation and the need for traditional education. Accreditation is a necessary step in ensuring that education is of high quality and that graduates are able to find employment. Without accreditation, online education is often a scam that lures unsuspecting victims with false promises.

The need for traditional education is becoming more apparent as the world moves towards online learning. Online education has its benefits, but it is important to ensure that it is of high quality and that it is accredited. Accreditation is a necessary step in ensuring that education is of high quality and that graduates are able to find employment. Without accreditation, online education is often a scam that lures unsuspecting victims with false promises.

We need a larger slice of the reform cake, say schools

3+3+4 E3

News

A tribute to Andrew ‘Poon Sir’ E4

Features

Two systems, one life... maths at the check out E5

Does an online university need physical presence?

An online university operates through the internet and does not have a physical presence. This means that it does not have a campus, buildings, or classrooms. An online university relies on the internet to deliver its courses and to interact with its students. An online university is often less expensive than a traditional university, but it is important to ensure that it is of high quality and that it is accredited.

The need for traditional education is becoming more apparent as the world moves towards online learning. Online education has its benefits, but it is important to ensure that it is of high quality and that it is accredited. Accreditation is a necessary step in ensuring that education is of high quality and that graduates are able to find employment. Without accreditation, online education is often a scam that lures unsuspecting victims with false promises.

We need a larger slice of the reform cake, say schools

3+3+4 E3

News

A tribute to Andrew ‘Poon Sir’ E4

Features

Two systems, one life... maths at the check out E5

Does an online university need physical presence?

An online university operates through the internet and does not have a physical presence. This means that it does not have a campus, buildings, or classrooms. An online university relies on the internet to deliver its courses and to interact with its students. An online university is often less expensive than a traditional university, but it is important to ensure that it is of high quality and that it is accredited.

The need for traditional education is becoming more apparent as the world moves towards online learning. Online education has its benefits, but it is important to ensure that it is of high quality and that it is accredited. Accreditation is a necessary step in ensuring that education is of high quality and that graduates are able to find employment. Without accreditation, online education is often a scam that lures unsuspecting victims with false promises.